This usually takes about four office visits. According to the American Academy of Dermatology, about 50 to 80 percent of keloids shrink after treatment with injections. Sometimes they develop quickly, but usually they appear several months after you pierce your ear. If you buy through links on this page, we may earn a small commission. Studies show that retinoids can slightly reduce the size and symptoms, particularly itchiness, of keloids. While there are no clinically proven home remedies that can completely remove keloids, there are a few treatments you can use to reduce their appearance. Silicone gels: Several clinical studies show that silicone gels can improve the texture and fade the color of keloids. This extra tissue starts to spread out from the original wound, causing a bump or small mass that's larger than the original piercing. On the ear, keloids typically begin as small round bumps around the piercing site. However, it's usually used in conjunction with surgery. Nonsurgical removal: There are also several nonsurgical treatment options you can try. Sometimes your body makes too much scar tissue, leading to keloids. However, they also note many people experience a recurrence within five years. Cryotherapy: Cryotherapy treatments freeze the keloid. While you might not be able to completely get rid of a keloid, many of these options can help to significantly shrink it. Corticosteroids and other injections: Doctors can inject medications directly into your keloid to help shrink it, relieve symptoms, and make it softer. Remove your earring and ask your doctor about wearing a pressure earring. If you've ever had an ear keloid, don't pierce your ears again. If someone in your immediate family gets keloids, ask your dermatologist to do a test in a discreet area before you get any piercings, tattoos, or cosmetic surgery. If you know that you get keloids and you need surgery, be sure to inform your surgeon. Your keloid a keloid can form from any type of laws on your skin. Your doctor may prescribe a retinoid cream to help reduce the size and appearance of your keloid. They are earrings that put uniform pressure on part of the ear, which can help to avoid the shape of a keloid after surgery. However, press earrings are also very uncomfortable for most people and need to be worn for 16 hours a day for 6 to 12 months. Over time, the wire cuts the keloid and causes it to fall. It's better to consult a dermatologist, who can suggest a combination of different treatments. Your ears may have small keloids due to: scars, chickenpox, chickenpox, bites, etc. Although anyone can develop keloids, some people seem to have a higher risk based on certain factors, such as: skin color. No scientific studies have yet been carried out to prove this. Keloids are difficult to treat. What are keloids? Keloids are the excessive growth of scar tissue caused by trauma to your skin. People with darker skin are 15 to 20 times more likely to have keloids. Most dermatologists recommend a combination of different treatments to achieve lasting results. Drug removal: Your doctor may surgically remove a keloid from your ear using a scalpel. As with most other treatments, laser therapy is usually done in conjunction with another method. Ligature: A ligature is a surgical thread which is tied around the base of a keloid. They are common after piercings in the ears and can form both in the skin and in the cartilage of the ears. You are more likely to have a keloid if someone else has immediate family. Age: If you are to develop keloids, follow these tips to reduce the risk of developing a keloid.
